CARRY GOSPEL AND CASH TO THE SUFFERING MEXICANS, IN TERROR, FLEE FROM VOLCANO

MEXICO CITY, Feb. 15.—The Colima volcano is erupting again.

Another cliff has opened high up on the western slope of the mountain, and from it there is pouring down a solid stream of lava, which is now reaching the base of the mountain. People within the danger zone have fled in terror.

This lava is running down the deep track between the peaks at a distance of nearly two miles from the summit of the mountain.

Heavy showers of burning hot cinders and stones are being emitted from the craters at frequent intervals and wherever these fall the vegetation is killed.

The white melted sand set fire to the forests of pine and oak houses in small villages yesterday and to-day.

The earthquake shocks and detonations of the volcano have been continuing and the volcanoes are becoming more and more active.

A cascade of a column of fire and smoke pouring from the volcano is terrifying, particularly at night.

"HELLO GIRLS" STRIKE HALTED

By cleverly combining about equal parts of fact, diplomacy and a shrewd system of espionage, the managers of the big Fort Hill and Main telephone exchanges in Mink street have avoided the strike of their twenty-five girl operators. The danger is by no means over, however, and it is a pretty little game that is now going on.

The management, having the key of the bread box, holds the position of vantage.

but the girls are not unaware of the fact that their ability to stop all of Boston's business for two hours is an invaluable time is something of a weapon itself. The negotiations today took the form of a set of resolutions drawn up by the young women, in which they recite their grievances and give their ultimatum. They demand that the company stop the practice of penalizing what the company says are mistakes most step. They also demand that the company stop using the girls as scapegoats for the mistakes of the company. The other is caused by the rules. The girls say there are so many rules that if one attempts to do them all, the girls in the service would be rewarded so much that she would be discharged as incompetent.

There has always been a lot of trouble among the fighters over weight in training matches, and new rules which are being adopted will be sure to be received with satisfaction and their working out properly will be decided sooner or later.

Being one of the greatest boosters of the sport, Carroll had to use a great deal of money to get a new movement for a remedy which will do away with the trouble which has occurred in the past.

R. WORCESTER TELLS OF DRINK CURE BY PRAYER

the so-called Emmanuel movement in the country, preached at Battell Chapel to students in New Haven yesterday. He said the weakness of the average

"The idea that a church building exists for an hour or an hour and a quarter service once each week is wrong," said. Everybody should get all the possible out of the church. He told during a friend of Harry Thaw of the a habit.

"I know of nothing sadder in life than to go into a town and see life of all kinds going out side and then to behold the inside of a well equipped church with g the neatly engraved undertaker's offering to take care of a man when a dead."

Dr. Worcester said that the study of archeology would soon give the people such convincing proof of God's presence seven times in the week that no one will think it just to close up a church every day but one.

He addressed all the young men at Yale in their archeology, whether they were to write books or write advertisements or engage in the work of saving souls. By physiology, in the opinion of present-day knowledge, the human body is a shielded spiritual force in a man which is tied to him in a great emergency. The speaker told his Yale audience of the case of Harry Frost, a young man who came home in California, and whose life was very anxious that he should not lose the care of Dr. Worcester. Frost's illness, coming from Boston, stopped in Chicago, and while at the Auditorium there, not into one of his faintest did the doctor's diagnosis of the case. When he reached Boston, Dr. Worcester took him and. At that time the young man had tremendous appetite for drink. He put

Keep ON Thinking of Lincoln

We Americans Are Inclined to Celebrate Violently and to FORGET QUICKLY

Copyright, 1909, by American-Journal-Examiner

During the past few days we all thought, talked, sang and read of Lincoln. The Lincoln celebration and hundredth anniversary cannot do HIM any good. He is gone beyond praise, blame or honor.

We are those that should profit by the Lincoln day, and the Lincoln memories. Thought of him should not end with nightfall on his birthday. We again ask you to read some of LINCOLN'S ACTUAL words. To know the man we must know what HE SAID and thought, not merely what others say of him.

Lincoln realized that there are more kinds of slavery than one in this world. He understood the slavery of pride, and the slavery of drink, as well as the slavery of blacks owned by whites. He talked a good deal on the question of temperance. Here's an extract from a temperance address, which he delivered on the 22d of February sixty-seven years ago:

"Happy day when all appetites controlled, all passions subdued, all matters subjected—mind, all conquering mind, shall live and move, the monarch of the world. Glorious consummation! Hall, fall of fury! Reign of reason, all hail!"

"And when the victory shall be complete—when there shall be neither a slave nor a drunkard on the earth—how proud the title of that land which may truly claim to be the birthplace and the cradle of both those revolutions that shall have ended in that victory."

Lincoln understood the curse of drink, and he also understood its cause and power. His mind was broad and generous. Said he in that same address:

"In my judgment, such of us as have never fallen victims have been spared more by the absence of appetite than from any mental or moral superiority over those who have. Indeed, I believe if we take habitual drunkards as a class, their heads and their hearts will bear an advantageous comparison with those of any other class."

There was nothing of the "holier than thou" type about Lincoln. He combined common sense and knowledge of real life with his earnestness. He would not have been guilty of the hypocrisy which has obliterated the canteen in our army and thus driven the soldiers to drunkenness in dives. A solemn committee once called to inform the President that he must "abolish the use of liquor in the army," adding that the recent defeats were undoubtedly the judgment of God for the drunkenness of the soldiers. Lincoln replied that this was a little unreasonable on the part of the Lord, since "the Southerners drank a great deal worse whiskey and a great deal more of it." He then sent away the committee.

A good many people in the world are depressed. Lincoln, like all men of real power and free from vanity, suffered much from depression. He wrote to a friend, Joshua F. Speed of Springfield, in 1842, on the 4th of July:

"I am so poor and make so little headway in the world that I drop back in a month of idleness as much as I gain in a year's sowing."

And after he had been defeated for election in November, 1858, he wrote:

"I am glad I made the late race. It gave me a hearing on the great and durable question of the age, which I could have had in no other way; and though I now sink out of view, and shall be forgotten, I believe I have made some marks which will tell for the cause of civil liberty long after I am gone."

He was often sad and discouraged, but he was no whiner. Here is his advice to young men, valuable to those who waste time saying that the world is against them instead of using that time to make the world recognize them:

"The way for a young man to rise is to improve himself every way he can, never suspecting that anybody wishes to hinder him. Allow me to assure you that suspicion and jealousy never did help any man in any situation. There may sometimes be ungenerous attempts to keep a young man down; and they will succeed, too, if he allows his mind to be diverted from its true channel to brood over the attempted injury."

The guiding thought in Lincoln's mind was the actual RIGHT of men to be free—free from control by others. This thought was in his mind very early, when he worked his way down the river and saw the slaves and the poor whites, worse than black slaves. Here's a sample of his thought:

"What I do say is that no man is good enough to govern another man without that other's consent. I say this is the leading principle, the sheet-anchor of American republicanism."

Over and over again he emphasizes that idea. He knew that America would have trouble in the future as it had had in the past—strong men trying to control the weak. Here is his definition of the value of the Declaration of Independence, made in a speech at Springfield, Ill., in June, 1857:

"The assertion that 'all men are created equal' was of no practical use in effecting our separation from Great Britain; and it was placed in the Declaration not for that, but for future use. Its authors meant it to be—ah, thank God, it is now proving itself—a stumbling block to all those who in after times might seek to turn a free people back into the hateful paths of despotism. They knew the proneness of prosperity to breed tyrants, and they meant when such should rear up, in the fair land and commonwealth, they should find left for them at least one hard nut to crack."

Remember, above all things, you who feel that you haven't a very good chance in life, that, so far as material conditions go, Lincoln, who did so much, had as bad a chance as anybody.

When the Dictionary of Congress wanted to know something about him in 1858 he wrote this:

"Born February 12, 1809, in Hardin County, Kentucky.
"Education defective.
"Profession, a lawyer.
"Have been a captain of volunteers in Black Hawk War.
"Postmaster at a very small office.
"Four times a member of the Illinois Legislature, and was a member of the lower house of Congress."

And later, in a very short autobiography which he gave to J. W. Tull in December, 1858, he says of himself, among other things:

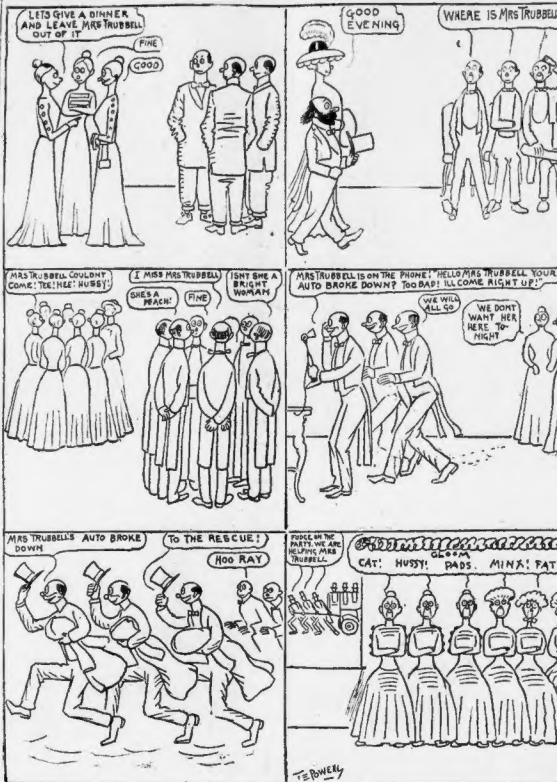

"My father, at the death of his father, was but six years of age, and he grew up literally without education. He removed from Kentucky to where, is now Spencer County, Indiana, in his eighth year. We reached our new home about the time the State came into the Union. It was a wild region, with many bears and other wild animals still in the woods. There I grew up."

And this is how he described his own personality in that same autobiography:

"If any personal description of me is thought desirable, it may be said that I am in height six feet four inches, nearly; lean the flesh, weighing on an average one hundred and eighty pounds; dark complexion, with coarse black hair and gray eyes. No other marks or brands recollected."

WANTS CARS KEPT CLEAN

Editor BOSTON AMERICAN:
I have read several letters in your paper in regard to needed reforms, and take the liberty of writing you to request the law prohibiting spitting in streets and cross streets. The Boston & Maine road cars are a disgrace. The conductors and the cars are full up with people who regularly spit upon the floor, and if they are not kept clean it is a terrible condition. We don't the Mayor Council should request the police to enforce law against spitting in the Boston & Maine cars. If they won't the government should keep the cars in the State.

WITH REGARD TO THE SOUL

Editor BOSTON AMERICAN:
A little clearer consideration of what this life is before we are called to another would seem to be in order. For my part, matter I know, living matter I know, but life, as an entity, life, except as an occasional property, attribute, accident of matter, life apart from a certain pulsing structure of protoplasm—never I know it. With regard to the soul, we ought to consult the psychologists. I should like to consult to your correspondent, Mr. Murray, and others, two exquisite characters in Professor James's Psychology—these are not infrequently and on the occasion in which he is irritatingly resolve the transcendental ego into certain solid entities in the back part of the head, and the love of food, and the extravagant imperative of duty into certain disturbances of moderate kinetic energy along the psychomotoric nerve.

W. C. ROSE.

HIDDEN FROM THE PRESS.

Editor BOSTON AMERICAN:
Every day in police department, one to five hundred men are arrested for various offenses, and are held in the station house, and are being kept from the public to order that the police department cannot be bothered. I myself, was robbed and brutally assaulted and was carried to the station house, and I know of two prominent men who were recently killed lately by broad daylight. No account ever appeared in the papers. If reporters were stationed for a week in these town hall station houses it would open the public eyes to daily assaults, robberies, etc. Yours,
